

Sudan band's music empowers sidelined ethnic group

Sun, 2022-06-05 22:59

KHARTOUM: Nouredine Jaber, a musician with a unique part-guitar, part-tamboura instrument, is giving voice to Sudan's long-marginalized eastern communities through a new album.

Hailing from the Red Sea city of Port Sudan, Jaber belongs to the Beja people, a group of nomadic herders and breeders with unique languages, culture, food and music.

They have borne the weight of disenfranchisement, especially under President Omar Bashir who was ousted in 2019.

But the title of his first album, due out later in June, conveys a different message: "Beja Power."
