

News story: How to give safely to charities

Our latest safer giving campaign aims to help you continue giving safely to registered charities.

Giving to charity is a longstanding and important tradition and the British public are always generous in their support for charities.

Charity scams are small in number compared to how much is given safely, but the charity sector generates an annual income of nearly £75 billion making it an attractive target for criminals.

We want to make sure that the public are aware of the correct steps to follow when supporting and donating to charity, so that all donations go to the intended beneficiaries.

By making simple checks part of the routine of donating, such as checking the charity register, we can all become smarter and more conscious donors, and help promote public trust in the sector as a whole.

Key advice for safer giving

- check the charity's name and registration number www.gov.uk/checkcharity. Most charities with an annual income of £5,000 or more must be registered
- make sure the charity is genuine before giving any financial information
- be careful when responding to emails or clicking on links within them
- check whether street collectors are wearing a proper ID badge and that any collection tin is sealed and undamaged
- ask the collector for more information if in doubt
- contact the charity that you're seeking to donate to or work with to find out more about their spending
- carefully review collection bags for clothing and household goods to check whether they are from a genuine charity
- check whether fundraising materials are genuine. They should feature the charity's name, registered name and a landline contact number
- never feel under pressure by a fundraiser into making a donation immediately
- use the same level of caution every time you support or donate to a charity

Reporting suspicious activity

After making these checks, if you think that a collection or appeal is not legitimate, report it to the police. You can also complain about a charity to us and the fundraising regulator.

If you think a collection is fraudulent report it to Action Fraud through their website or call them on 0300 123 2040.

If you think a collector does not have a licence – report it to the relevant Local Authority Licensing Team or the Metropolitan Police (if in Greater London). Also let the charity and Action Fraud know if you can.

Press release: Digital Secretary meets those affected by online harms

Upcoming White Paper will outline steps government will take to ensure the UK is the safest place in the world to be online.

Press release: Digital Secretary meets those affected by online harms

The Digital Secretary Jeremy Wright has today met with people affected by online harms, as the Government finalises what new laws will be necessary to ensure UK citizens are better protected online.

Many of those the Secretary of State met with have suffered directly from online harms – including cyber bullying, revenge porn and hate speech. They are now publicly campaigning on online safety issues and supporting others through their own platforms and work with charities.

The meeting at the Department for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) comes ahead of the publication of the Online Harms White Paper, which will outline steps government will take to ensure the UK is the safest place in the world to be online.

The meeting was an opportunity to listen to those who have been directly affected by these issues to help shape any new legislation and hear their views about what more social media companies could do to combat the negative effects of their platforms.

Digital Secretary Jeremy Wright Secretary said:

Today I have heard directly from those who have suffered the very worst that the online world has to offer. I am grateful to them for sharing their experiences and for their input into what needs to change to ensure future generations can make the best possible use of everything good about the internet, without experiencing these harms.

The era of self-regulation is coming to an end and online platforms will have to do more to keep their users safe. We will shortly set out the responsibilities of online platforms, how these responsibilities should be met and what would should happen if they are not.

Alex Holmes, Deputy CEO at the Diana Award said:

The Diana Award has been one of many organisations engaged with government throughout this process, and it was useful to again meet with Jeremy alongside parents, young people and our Anti-Bullying Ambassadors from across the UK who are trained to keep themselves and peers safe online.

Industry play a vital part in interventions working with organisations like ours and many others to help us to manage risks and reduce harms for individuals, particularly children & young people. I hope that the White Paper will not only allow the UK to continue to be leaders in internet safety but that it also attracts wider international support from other governments.

Alongside representatives from charities the Diana Award, the UK Safer Internet Centre, Mencap and the NSPCC, attendees included:

James McVey – James was bullied at school and has since been vocal about it as a Diana Award ambassador, and member of the band, The Vamps.

Calum McSwiggan – is a prominent Youtuber and frequently posts to his 200,000 followers about LGBT issues, including his own experiences of abuse online.

James Okulaja – James was subjected to online abuse and is now a national anti-bullying ambassador.

Sarah Parke – Sarah is the mother of Grace Parke, who was cyber bullied and suffered from serious mental health issues. Sarah and Grace campaign together on the issues.

Amy Clarke – Amy is a digital spokesperson at Royal Mencap Society. Amy has a learning disability and has received abuse on social media as a result of this.

Ruth Moss – Ruth's daughter Sophie took her own life, aged 13, after being exposed to inappropriate self-harm and suicide content on social networks. Ruth has involved the police and taken steps to prevent her daughter being able to view more distressing and harmful images online.

Mared Parry – Mared was manipulated into sending sexual pictures of herself as a child. She now educates young girls about the dangers of online grooming.

Press release: Digital Secretary meets those affected by online harms

Upcoming White Paper will outline steps government will take to ensure the UK is the safest place in the world to be online.

Speech: Queen's Counsel appointments ceremony: Lord Chancellor speech

David Gauke today (11 March 2019) welcomed this year's appointees to Queen's Counsel at Westminster Hall.