

Blood thinners improve outcomes in 'moderately ill' Covid-19 patients

Treating Covid-19 patients who are not critically ill with blood thinning drugs helps reduce the need for organ support and critical care, a recently published study has found.

Trust seeks feedback on proposal to improve specialist infectious diseases inpatients care

Patients, carers, service user groups and other stakeholders are being asked for their views on the proposal to move Imperial College Healthcare NHS Trust's specialist infectious diseases inpatients service.

Blood clots in those with severe Covid-19 may be related to abnormal antibody response

A new study of cells provides support and scientific validation for the MATIS clinical trial, led by Imperial College London and Imperial College Healthcare NHS Trust.

A single chair for north west London's acute trusts to support more collaborative working

The north west London NHS has agreed to appoint a single chair for its four acute trusts.

New national organ donation and transplantation plan for Greece led by Trust consultant

A landmark report for a new national organ donation and transplantation plan in Greece has been accepted.