

Tory manifesto commitment on mixed sex wards in tatters as incidents rise 50% in a year

Tory manifesto commitment on mixed sex wards in tatters as incidents rise 50% in a year

Theresa May has been accused of abandoning yet another Tory Manifesto commitment as new figures reveal the number of NHS patients in mixed sex wards running 50% higher than this time last year.

New figures published by NHS England today show that hospitals breached mixed sex accommodation rules 1750 times during January and February this year – compared to 1164 in the same period last year

Mixed sex accommodation breaches have gone through the roof since Theresa May took over last July – with 5618 in the 8 months since she became Prime Minister, compared with just 4259 in the whole of 2015.

Ending mixed sex wards was a key pledge of David Cameron's Government in 2010 and the 2015 Conservative Manifesto included a promise to "continue to eliminate mixed sex wards".

Labour said today's figures showed that Theresa May's decision to restrain NHS spending was pushing hospitals to the brink.

Jonathan Ashworth MP, Labour's Shadow Health Secretary, said:

"Tory cuts to social care have seen hospital attendances rocket and now it seems Theresa May has given up on her manifesto promise to eliminate mixed sex wards. Patients expect dignity and respect when they're being treated in hospital but this Government is letting them down. The Government has overseen a catastrophic collapse of patient standards and this failure on mixed sex wards is yet another sign that England's hospitals are at breaking point.

"The Prime Minister needs to get a grip and explain what she is going to do to fix the crisis which she has created. Every day that goes by brings more news of patient care getting worse under this Government. Quite simply the Government's policy of underfunding and mismanaging the NHS has left hospitals on the brink."

Ends

Editors notes

.
The Conservative Manifesto 2015 (P37) said: "We will ensure that English hospitals and GP surgeries are the safest in the world, places where you are treated with dignity and respect. We will continue to eliminate mixed-sex wards."

"Mixed sex wards virtually gone." Jeremy Hunt, Speech to Conservative Party Conference, 1 October 2013

<http://www.ukpol.co.uk/jeremy-hunt-2013-conservative-party-conference-speech/>

"The number of hospital-acquired infections continues to go down and mixed-sex wards have been virtually eliminated." Jeremy Hunt, Hansard, 23 October 2012

<https://hansard.parliament.uk/Commons/2012-10-23/debates/12102347000022/NHSCost?highlight=mixed%20sex#contribution-12102347000044>

"We said that we would sort out mixed-sex wards and hospital-acquired infections—promise delivered."

David Cameron, Hansard, 18 March 2015, Column 756

.
Mixed sex accommodation breaches available here:
<https://www.england.nhs.uk/statistics/statistical-work-areas/mixed-sex-accommodation/msa-data/>

.
There were 1040 breaches in January and 710 in February – a 50% rise on the combined 1164 for the same two months last year.

BCC comments on interest rate decision

BCC comments on the Monetary Policy Committee's interest rate decision.

16th March 2017

Commenting on today's interest rate decision by the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee, Suren Thiru, Head of Economics at the British Chambers of Commerce (BCC), said:

"While the Bank of England's decision to keep interest rates on hold was widely expected, there was a surprising shift in the committee's voting pattern, with one member voting for a rate rise. This partly reflects the fact that the Monetary Policy Committee are facing a more challenging period, with inflation likely to move materially above the 2% target in the coming months. Furthermore, if US monetary policy continues to tighten as expected, it may weigh on UK rate decisions by increasing the downward pressure on Sterling, pushing UK price growth higher.

"However, with UK economic conditions likely to become more subdued over the near term, and little evidence that higher inflation is becoming entrenched in stronger pay growth, the MPC has sufficient leeway to tolerate a prolonged period of above target inflation. Therefore, while the next move in interest rates is likely to be upwards, we don't expect this to happen until the end of 2018.

"With the MPC close to exhausting the monetary policy tools available to them, the government must do more to support business confidence and incentivise investment, particularly by tackling the rising input costs faced by businesses."

Ends

Notes to editors:

The British Chambers of Commerce (BCC) sits at the heart of a powerful network of 52 Accredited Chambers of Commerce across the UK, representing thousands of businesses of all sizes and within all sectors. Our Global Business Network connects exporters with nearly 40 markets around the world. For more information, visit: www.britishchambers.org.uk

Media contacts:

Allan Williams – Senior Press Manager

020 7654 5812 / 07920583381

Orla Hennessy – Press and Communications Officer

020 7654 5813 / 07825746812

The only way to get all of the evidence Ofcom needs to make this assessment is to go ahead with part two of the Leveson Inquiry – Tom Watson

Tom

Watson MP, Labour's Shadow Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, commenting on Karen Bradley's announcement that she has today referred the Sky bid to Ofcom, said:

"Intervening in this proposed merger was the only legitimate course of action for Karen Bradley to take.

"It is right that Ofcom applies a 'fit and proper' assessment to the bid and considers any public interest test, in addition to concerns about plurality and broadcasting standards.

"But a comprehensive fit and proper test will take time, so that all of the Murdochs' failures of corporate governance during the phone hacking scandal and elsewhere can be properly investigated.

"The only way to get all of the evidence Ofcom needs to make this assessment is to go ahead with part two of the Leveson Inquiry – as David Cameron promised to the victims of phone hacking. If the Government was really committed to the fullest investigation of this bid, they would commence it immediately."

Press release: UK to help businesses step up investment in world's poorest countries

Today (16 March), International Development Secretary Priti Patel set out how the UK is making it easier for companies to invest in the world's poorest countries and urged businesses to invest at a time of unprecedented humanitarian crises.

Speaking to CEOs at Methodist Central Hall in London at the "Transforming Investment Risk" event hosted together with the President of the World Bank Group, Jim Yong Kim, Ms Patel outlined how investment from British and international companies is desperately needed to create jobs and build basic infrastructure, such as roads and ports in the world's poorest countries.

City of London businesses Lloyds of London, Aviva, Prudential, Standard Chartered and the London Stock Exchange, have already confirmed they will rise to the challenge set by Ms Patel.

This will help create more stable and prosperous economies, which will mean countries have a better chance of overcoming future crises and standing on their own two feet.

International Development Secretary, Priti Patel said:

Conflict, broken politics and instability have left the world facing an unprecedented humanitarian challenge.

The UK is giving urgent relief to help millions of people on the brink of starvation, but the fact is, without job creation and a healthy economy many of the world's poorest countries have little chance of developing the resilience needed to overcome future crises.

With one billion young people entering the job market across Asia and Sub-Saharan Africa over the next decade private investment is absolutely vital to help lift people out of debilitating poverty.

We will make it easier for companies – including British ones – to invest in these new opportunities and help build a more stable and prosperous world for us all.

World Bank President, Jim Yong Kim said:

Achieving sustainable growth is only possible if we harness the private sector's expertise, capacity to innovate, and capital.

Mobilizing private investment, even in the most challenging markets, will lift people out of extreme poverty while developing new markets, supporting economic growth and reducing the risks of violence and fragility that can cause widespread suffering. The UK is an important partner for the World Bank Group and I look forward to our continued collaboration on this and other important issues such as health, nutrition and creating jobs.

International and UK businesses have said they find it too risky to invest in developing markets because of over-regulation, poor energy supplies and a lack of access to financial services.

Ms Patel set out how the UK is cutting excessive red tape, match-making investors with specific opportunities and using the City of London's expertise to improve financial services, including insurance in these countries. This will make it easier for businesses – including British companies – to invest.

The UK is:

- improving national electricity systems and attracting investment in infrastructure across Africa and South Asia;
- drawing on expertise from the City of London's insurance sector to help businesses and governments get better access to insurance against natural disasters;
- continuing to support the work of CDC to create jobs in riskier markets;
- working with other UK government departments to increase UK Export Finance's ability to guarantee exports in local currencies – to help protect against currency fluctuation;
- working closely with the City of London to help it become the go-to location for development finance – helping businesses from developing countries to issue bonds in London; and
- creating skilled workforces for industrial parks, like Hawassa in Ethiopia, to help encourage investors to set up their factories in developing countries.

The additional financing needed to achieve the UN Global Goals by 2030 is estimated at $2.5 trillion every year, but current investment levels are less than half of that.

The private sector is a key part of this – it has the expertise to make innovative investments in challenging markets, and DFID's first Economic Development Strategy sets out how private sector investment will help developing nations speed up their rate of economic growth, trade more and industrialise faster, and ultimately lift themselves out of poverty.

Group Chief Executive Officer of Aviva Plc Mark Wilson said:

Private capital has the power to transform the lives of those most in need. We must turn the current trickle of private capital into a torrent, unleashing trillions of pounds to deliver tangible and lasting change. DFID's Economic Strategy recognises just that and Aviva commends it.

Head of Innovation at Lloyds of London Trevor Maynard said:

The changing nature of risk and the persistent levels of underinsurance in developing and emerging economies mean communities around the world are increasingly vulnerable to catastrophic disasters. Lloyd's believes the insurance industry and other financial services can play a key role in mitigating this risk and building global resilience.

I therefore welcome DFID's Economic Development Strategy, which sets a clear ambition for the City to demonstrate global leadership and cement the UK's position as the leading financial centre for the developing world. The City of London can and must play a leading role in financing growth in the developing world, creating jobs and ending the dependence on aid.

CEO of London Stock Exchange Group Xavier Rolet said:

London Stock Exchange Group is delighted to partner with the Department for International Development to support investment into the developing world's most productive sectors and fast-growing companies, driving job creation and economic growth.

Working in partnership with African exchanges, we are developing robust, efficient and transparent capital markets to raise finance for African companies and encourage increased investor participation in Africa's growth story.

Regional Chief Executive of Europe and Americas for Standard Chartered Tracy Clarke said:

Standard Chartered supports the people and companies driving investment, trade and the creation of wealth across Asia, Africa and the Middle East. We will continue to partner with DFID, the World Bank's International Finance Corporation and others to deliver innovative and blended finance solutions for our markets.

Chief Executive Officer of Prudential Africa Matt Lilley said:

The City of London and the UK's financial services sector is a unique asset, with an unrivalled concentration of capital and expertise, and truly global reach. We are pleased to join DfID and the World Bank in discussing how companies like Prudential can help drive growth in emerging African economies, reaching more customers, creating jobs, strengthening capital markets and investment, and supporting the long term transition from aid dependence.

- The Secretary of State of International Development Priti Patel and World Bank President Jim Kim are hosting a joint UK-World Bank Group event for UK and international businesses on 16 March 2017. The event is taking place at Methodist Central Hall, Westminster, London, SW1H 9NH.

The UK is making it easier for businesses to invest in developing countries by:

- improving national electricity systems and attracting investment in infrastructure across Africa and South Asia; as unreliable and unaffordable energy is a significant barrier to economic growth. Power outages reduce GDP in Sub-Saharan Africa by 2% and reduce sales of businesses by 6%;
- drawing on expertise from the City of London's insurance sector to help businesses and governments get better access to insurance against natural disasters so they can prepare for potential emergencies and recover more quickly;
- reducing the financing risks associated with essential projects to make commercial lenders like Banks more willing to provide additional finance to initiatives that bring jobs to developing regions;
- continuing to support the work of CDC, which makes pioneering investments with clear development impact, for example in places including the Democratic Republic of Congo, Afghanistan and Sierra Leone, creating jobs and opportunities for growth;
- working with other UK government departments to increase UK Export Finance's ability to guarantee exports in local currencies – to help protect against currency fluctuation;
- working closely with the City of London to help it become the go-to location for development finance – helping businesses from developing countries to issue bonds in London. For example, the London Stock Exchange and IFC have had tremendous success in building a market for Masala Bonds, with Indian companies now able to access rupee finance through London. This will make sure investments can be made free of the fear that fluctuations in currency markets will result in bankruptcy; and
- creating skilled workforces for industrial parks, like Hawassa in Ethiopia, to help encourage investors to set up their factories in developing countries.

The UK has stepped up to give urgent relief to millions of people who are at risk of starvation in South Sudan, Somalia, North East Nigeria and Yemen, and continues to lead the global response to the ongoing crises in Syria. Our humanitarian support has included:

- Providing emergency health services for 1.7 million people in Somalia.
- Food for over 500,000 people in South Sudan and life-saving nutritional support for 27,500 children.

- Life-saving support to the 650,000 South Sudanese refugees who have fled to Uganda.
- Life-saving aid to Yemen and North East Nigeria which provided food, medical supplies, water and emergency shelter to over two million people in 2016.

We need protection from terrorism, but pointless laws serve no purpose – Diane Abbott

Diane Abbott MP, Labour's Shadow Home Secretary, responding to comments from the new independent reviewer of terrorism legislation, said:

“This review is welcome. Max Hill makes some good points on removing laws that are never used. We need protection from terrorism, but pointless laws serve no purpose.

“He also highlights the fact certain communities, in particular Muslims, feel unfairly targeted. This will add to wider concerns around the Government's Prevent strategy, which should also be reviewed.”