Joint statement by Vice-President Ansip and Commissioner Gabriel on the one year anniversary of the end of roaming charges in Europe

Andrus Ansip, Vice-President for the Digital Single Market and Mariya Gabriel, Commissioner for Digital Economy and Society announced after the first year without roaming charges in the EU that Europeans largely benefit from the new rules:

"We are happy to see that people use their mobile phones more and more freely when travelling abroad in the EU, especially when it comes to mobile data. Frequent travellers and European youth, in particular, recognise the benefits of roaming without extra costs.

This is an example of an EU that concretely improves the life of European citizens. Roam like at home is working and is becoming a habit: customers are appreciating it, consumption is up and the demand for mobile services while travelling in the EU is very high. It benefits consumers and operators alike. The large increase in roaming traffic has also a positive effect on wholesale revenues for operators.

Our main goal was to lift the significant barriers created by roaming charges, for consumers who were limited by the cost of using their phones abroad, but also for mobile operators. Since we abolished the charges, more than five times the amount of data has been consumed and almost two and a half times more phone calls have been made in the EU and the European Economic Area. This is great news. Moreover, 82% of people who have travelled to another EU country in the last year say they have benefitted from the new rules. No-one has to face a bill shock anymore after returning from holidays or a business trip abroad.

We will continue our cooperation with national regulators to monitor the developments on mobile markets all over Europe and to guarantee the rules are well applied.

The good news for European citizens does not end here. Additionally to end of roaming charges, European citizens can travel with their digital subscriptions since 1 April this year. Starting from 3 December this year the European consumers will be able to find the best deals online when buying goods and services across the EU without being discriminated based on nationality and residence."

Background

Thanks to the new EU roaming rules, in place since 15 June 2017, consumers can use their mobile phone while travelling abroad in the EU as they would do at home, without paying extra charges.

The latest Eurobarometer survey on roaming, 62% of Europeans are aware that roaming charges have ended and 69% think that they, or someone they know, will benefit. Especially frequent travellers and young people recognise a clear benefit of the new rules.

The end of roaming charges was an important step to make the EU's single market fit for the digital age. Altogether the Commission has presented 29 legislative proposals under the Digital Single Market strategy. 16 of the proposals have by now been agreed, with first ones to come into force being new roaming rules, portability of online content and rules against unjustified geoblocking.

The Commission encourages the co-legislators to conclude the remaining 13 legislative proposals under the Digital Single Market strategy by the end of 2018.

Spain: Investment Plan for Europe – Metro de Madrid to upgrade and improve its network with EIB financing

- EU bank signs an initial EUR 85m loan, part of total financing of EUR 200m for modernisation and upgrade investment in the Madrid metro
- The agreement will make it possible to improve station accessibility, increase line capacity and optimise the network's energy efficiency
- The project benefits from Juncker Plan support

The Madrid metro is set to offer improved levels of efficiency, safety and comfort. The European Investment Bank (EIB) has provided EUR 85m – the initial tranche of a EUR 200m loan to cover 50% of Metro de Madrid's investments until 2019 to upgrade and modernise its infrastructure. The aim of the project, which is supported by the Investment Plan for Europe (known as the Juncker Plan), is to improve the quality of the service offered by the Madrid metro. EIB Vice-President Emma Navarro and Metro de Madrid Chief Executive Francisco Borja Carabante signed the agreement today in Madrid.

Madrid has one of the most extensive metro networks in the world, with 301 stations used by 626.4 million passengers in 2017. The EIB agreement will make it possible to take action in 23 areas including trains, rails, signalling systems, and ticket checking and sales. The goal is to improve the public service and energy efficiency of the metro.

In concrete terms, the EIB Juncker Plan financing will provide the funds needed to carry out station accessibility improvement work and increase line capacity, upgrading safety equipment in electrical substations. Passengers will also benefit from other investments such as modernised escalators, renovated ventilation systems in trains and tunnels, and upgraded ticket machines. Network safety will also be improved thanks to the installation of new video surveillance and fire protection systems.

On signing the agreement, EIB Vice-President Emma Navarro said: "This agreement enables the EIB to provide financing to modernise the Madrid metro, thereby helping to raise the quality of this service by expanding its capacity, cutting waiting times and improving safety. We are also delighted to finance this project as it gives us the opportunity to support climate action and sustainable public transport for the people of Madrid."

European Commissioner for Regional Policy Corina Crețu – in charge of urban policy in the EU – said: "Everybody agrees that a fast and modern metro network is vital for maintaining a good quality of life in a city. Wherever the metro goes, it creates new opportunities for local businesses, services and tourism. Of course it also helps reduce urban traffic congestion and ensure city air is cleaner. This leads me to congratulate Madrid on using the Juncker Plan to finance such an important urban project."

According to Metro de Madrid Chief Executive Francisco Borja Carabante, "Metro de Madrid seeks financing from several EU bodies to implement its investment plans, which aim to continuously improve service quality and mobility for the people of Madrid. The EIB is always among the EU funding sources that Metro de Madrid uses to help implement its projects, as it finances up to 50% of their cost. EIB loans also come with very favourable terms, and can be made available as and when the various projects are launched."

As well as improving services, these EIB-financed investments will make it possible to reduce the environmental impact of this mode of transport, which will be more energy efficient thanks to the optimisation of its electrical and ventilation systems.

Climate action and support for public transport

The EIB provides more financing for projects reducing the impact of climate change than any other institution. Last year, 28% of its activity – EUR 19.4bn – was dedicated to this objective. Part of this financing was focused on promoting cleaner modes of transport, specifically on supporting metro networks in various cities across the world (more information available here).

The EIB has worked with Metro de Madrid since 1989 to finance its investments. Over 30 years, the EU bank has provided more the EUR 4bn to extend, maintain and modernise Madrid metro network infrastructure.

Juncker Plan supports new projects in Poland, Spain and La Réunion (France)

The European Investment Bank (EIB) Group has signed three new agreements, all of which were made possible by the Juncker Plan's European Fund for Strategic Investments (EFSI). First, the European Investment Fund (EIF) and Polish national promotional bank Bank Gospodarstwa Krajowego (BGK) are doubling their support for loans to a total of PLN 4 billion (c. €950 million) for over 18,000 small businesses and entrepreneurs across Poland. Second, the EIB is providing a €200 million loan to renovate Madrid's metro network, improving accessibility and increasing its capacity. Third, the EIB is supporting the development of the Roland Garros airport on Reunion island, one of the EU's outermost regions, with €100 million in financing. Commenting on the Polish SME financing agreement, Commissioner for Internal Market, Industry, Entrepreneurship and SMEs, Elżbieta Bieńkowska said: "Less than a year ago, BGK signed an agreement with the European Investment Fund to double their support to SMEs in Poland with the backing of the EU's budgetary guarantee, and today this is being doubled once again. Thanks to our joint efforts and enhanced cooperation with BGK we have provided small businesses with access to finance: already 7,000 SMEs have benefitted from this Polish-EU cooperation. Europe's economy depends upon its entrepreneurs. Keep up the good work." (Full press releases can be found here. Roaming one year later: majority of Europeans see the benefits of end of roaming charges

According to a new Eurobarometer survey on roaming 82% of people who have travelled to another EU country in the last year say they have benefitted from the new rules. Moreover, 62% of Europeans are aware that roaming charges have ended and 69% think that they, or someone they know, will benefit. Especially young people recognise a clear benefit of the new rules, with 80% of those aged 15-24 seeing the advantages. Vice-President for the Digital Single Market Andrus Ansip and Commissioner for Digital Economy and Society Mariya Gabriel said in a joint statement: "This is an example of an EU that concretely improves the life of European citizens. Roam like at home is working and is becoming a habit: customers are appreciating it, consumption is up and the demand for mobile services while travelling in the EU is very high. It benefits consumers and operators alike." The full statement is available here. Further findings of the survey show that many travellers have started changing their mobile phone use. Respondents are less likely to restrict their mobile use while travelling (e.g. by switching off the phone or data roaming). The share of travellers who used their mobile data while roaming as often as at home has increased to 34% from 26% in 2017. The first year without roaming charges shows that in general mobile operators comply with the new rules well. National regulators are ensuring their implementation in Member States. The Commission continues its cooperation with national regulators to monitor the developments on mobile markets all over Europe and to guarantee the compliance. The Eurobarometer report on roaming is available here. More details on roaming are available here. (For more information: Nathalie Vandystadt – Tel.: +32 229 67083; Inga Höglund – Tel.: +32 229 50698)

Joint statement by Vice-President Ansip and Commissioner Gabriel on the one year anniversary of the end of roaming charges in Europe

Andrus Ansip, Vice-President for the Digital Single Market and Mariya Gabriel, Commissioner for Digital Economy and Society announced after the first year without roaming charges in the EU that Europeans largely benefit from the new rules:

"We are happy to see that people use their mobile phones more and more freely when travelling abroad in the EU, especially when it comes to mobile data. Frequent travellers and European youth, in particular, recognise the benefits of roaming without extra costs.

This is an example of an EU that concretely improves the life of European citizens. Roam like at home is working and is becoming a habit: customers are appreciating it, consumption is up and the demand for mobile services while travelling in the EU is very high. It benefits consumers and operators alike. The large increase in roaming traffic has also a positive effect on wholesale revenues for operators.

Our main goal was to lift the significant barriers created by roaming charges, for consumers who were limited by the cost of using their phones abroad, but also for mobile operators. Since we abolished the charges, more than five times the amount of data has been consumed and almost two and a half times more phone calls have been made in the EU and the European Economic Area. This is great news. Moreover, 82% of people who have travelled to another EU country in the last year say they have benefitted from the new rules. No-one has to face a bill shock anymore after returning from holidays or a business trip abroad.

We will continue our cooperation with national regulators to monitor the developments on mobile markets all over Europe and to guarantee the rules are well applied.

The good news for European citizens does not end here. Additionally to end of roaming charges, European citizens can travel with their digital subscriptions since 1 April this year. Starting from 3 December this year the European consumers will be able to find the best deals online when buying goods and services across the EU without being discriminated based on nationality and residence."

Background

Thanks to the new EU roaming rules, in place since 15 June 2017, consumers can use their mobile phone while travelling abroad in the EU as they would do at home, without paying extra charges.

The latest Eurobarometer survey on roaming, 62% of Europeans are aware that roaming charges have ended and 69% think that they, or someone they know, will benefit. Especially frequent travellers and young people recognise a clear benefit of the new rules.

The end of roaming charges was an important step to make the EU's single market fit for the digital age. Altogether the Commission has presented 29 legislative proposals under the Digital Single Market strategy. 16 of the proposals have by now been agreed, with first ones to come into force being new roaming rules, portability of online content and rules against unjustified geoblocking.

The Commission encourages the co-legislators to conclude the remaining 13 legislative proposals under the Digital Single Market strategy by the end of 2018.
