Greens react to increased threats of war and climate change

Responding to the World Economic Forum's Global Risks Report, Green Party co-leader and MP for Waveney Valley, Adrian Ramsay said:

"War and climate change are rightly recognised by global business and political leaders as the biggest risks to the world in the coming years. The major question is what they will do about them.

"The World Economic Forum meeting in Davos next week needs not just to recognise the problems but to act. For UK leaders, that means pressing for the rapid and irrevocable shift away from fossil fuels and an insistence that international laws and agreements are respected and implemented.

"No state, whoever its leader, should be allowed to tear up international agreements to tackle climate change or bully its neighbours with threats of war."
