

Native crayfish population survives following major incident

Intensive surveys by the Environment Agency has found the native white clawed crayfish population in Northumberland has survived a major incident.