

Scientists track faults ready to trigger earthquakes

Researchers at the British and US Geological Surveys have developed a new method for identifying risky faults with high potential to generate earthquakes.