

Sellafield expertise to benefit London's Crossrail

Martin Chown, Supply Chain Director, is using his Sellafield expertise to help bring benefits to London's Crossrail project. He has joined the Crossrail Advisory Board as the project to connect 42km of new tunnels to the existing tube and rail network serving London and the South East, enters its final year.

Martin has been a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers Infrastructure Client Group for the last two years. This group works to improve the efficiency of the construction sector and to help deliver major cost savings, and Martin will use his knowledge and experience from Sellafield to help deliver the greatest value from Crossrail.

Martin said:

I'm delighted to be able to apply the lessons of the progress we've made at Sellafield to the Crossrail project.

We're one of the biggest infrastructure leaders in the UK and I'm looking forward to using Sellafield know-how and experience for the benefit of this project as well as bringing new ideas and experience back into Sellafield to help us continue to deliver greater value for our business, the NDA and the UK as a whole. It's a win-win.

This demonstrates the increasing awareness of Sellafield Ltd as an industrial leader not just in the north but across the entire country.
