

UK sets sights on £40 billion satellite communications market with fresh investment

British companies developing satellite communications technology are to receive £30 million in government funding, Space Minister Liz Lloyd announced today, as the UK looks to secure a larger share of a global market worth £..