

Carla Denyer and Adrian Ramsay announced as new Green Party co-leaders

1 October 2021

- Green members elect Carla Denyer and Adrian Ramsay as new co-leaders
- Denyer: “We are at a crucial moment in history and it is clear that the other major political parties have failed”
- Ramsay: “More than ever, we need strong Green voices to make the compelling case for a Green transition, a just transition”

Green Party members have elected Carla Denyer and Adrian Ramsay as the new co-leaders of the party.

Denyer and Ramsay, who become co-leaders as a new opinion poll once again puts the Green Party in third place with 9% support [1], have pledged to make the party an electoral force able to win power and influence in every corner of England and Wales [2].

Carla Denyer, a Bristol City councillor and Green Party parliamentary candidate for Bristol West, pushed through Europe’s first ever Climate Emergency declaration at her local authority.

Denyer said:

“We are at a crucial moment in history and it is clear that the other major political parties have failed to bring about the change that is necessary. More than ever before, it is vital that Green policies are adopted for the benefit of our climate and our communities.

“We are thrilled to have been elected as Green Party leaders, but this is now where the hard work begins, to elect more MPs and more councillors across the country. It is only by doing this that we can make the difference we all so desperately want to see.

“We are so grateful to all of the members who voted for us at such an important time for our party, the country and the world at large.”

Adrian Ramsay, a former Green Party Deputy Leader and environmental charity CEO, who was part of the team that got Caroline Lucas elected as the first Green MP in Brighton Pavilion in 2010, said:

“Our country is in crisis – pumps running out of petrol, empty shelves in supermarkets and millions heading into winter fearing rising fuel bills. All worsened by our society’s addiction to fossil fuels.

“More than ever, we need strong Green voices to make the compelling case for a Green transition, a just transition.

“This will deliver practical alternatives that release people from dependence on fossil fuels. Insulating people’s homes and installing renewable energy systems. A clean, reliable public transport system. Producing our food in less intensive, more nature-friendly ways.

“All of which would create sustainable, secure jobs with decent rates of pay – and help prevent the next crisis.”

The new co-leaders of the Green party won after receiving 44% of the first preference votes and then 62% of the second round vote including second preferences.

Amelia Womack and Tamsin Omond came second with 30% of first preference votes. Womack remains as deputy leader.

Shahrar Ali came third with 21% of first preference votes.

The other candidates were Martin Hemingway and Tina Rothery who stood to be co-leaders, and Ashley Gunstock.

ENDS

Notes

1

<https://yougov.co.uk/topics/politics/articles-reports/2021/09/29/voting-intention-con-39-lab-31-28-29-sep>

2

<https://carlaandadrian.co.uk/>

Back to main news page

Adblock test \(Why?\)

Greens express profound disappointment over Labour Party failure to support fair voting system

27 September 2021

The Green Party has criticised the Labour leadership for failing to ensure the party backed a vote to support proportional representation at its conference today [Monday 27 September]. [1]

Labour conference defeated the motion after it was sent to a card vote. This came after 150 Constituency Labour Parties submitted motions on the topic and more than 83% of members previously said they support the idea. [2]

Zack Polanski, Green Party spokesperson on Democracy and Citizen Engagement, said:

“This is a really disappointing decision by the Labour Party which shows a real lack of leadership and vision from the top of the party.

“Labour members overwhelmingly support electoral reform, yet Keir Starmer has done next to nothing to ensure that his party’s delegates voted through a motion which could have revolutionised British politics and put an end to the Tory stranglehold on our failed democratic system.

“In the conference hall, speaker after speaker argued passionately for Labour to adopt proportional representation in its next manifesto, yet it still did not pass. Without proportional representation and electoral cooperation Labour has an impossible mountain to climb and the country faces another five years of chaos with the Conservatives.

“It is clear that British voters want to move on from the failure and division caused by the two-party system, and so it is extremely worrying to see Labour fail to grasp the need for a more cooperative and collaborative form of politics which will benefit everyone.

“The Green Party has always supported a system that translates votes fairly into seats. This is the very minimum we can expect from a country that calls itself a democracy. If people want to back a party that will consistently fight for this, then they know where to come.”

Notes

[1]

<https://labourlist.org/2021/09/conference-rejects-motion-committing-labour-to-proportional-representation/>

[2]

<https://labourlist.org/2021/07/exclusive-83-of-members-say-labour-should-back-proportional-representation/>

Back to main news page

Adblock test (Why?)

Greens applaud Labour steps towards a more collaborative politics

24 September 2021

Greens have welcomed the opportunity the Labour party has to pass a motion for electoral reform at their autumn conference. At least 144 Constituency Labour Parties (CLPs) have submitted the Labour for a New Democracy motion [1] – the greatest number on a single issue in Labour conference history.

Labour members overwhelmingly back reform, with 83% supporting a system of proportional representation [2], while 48% of Constituency Labour Parties (CLPs) have passed pro-PR policy and 144 have sent motions asking Labour to back PR to this year's party conference.

Zack Polanski, Green party spokesperson on Democracy and Citizen Engagement, said:

“There's unprecedented demand for Proportional Representation among the Labour membership and CLPs. They deserve praise for their commitment to a fairer system that promotes democracy and equality. Like British voters, they are ready to move beyond the failure, division and sterility of two-party politics.

“Membership support for electoral reform is almost as strong as it is among Green members, and the Green Party has always supported proportional representation.

“There are fears that the Labour leadership will try again to kick the debate on electoral reform into the long grass or that a few will lobby hard for a no vote. This would be a serious blow to democracy which is already at risk from Tory attempts to gerrymander and suppress voting.

“We urge Labour to listen to its members. If it does, proportional representation will become a cornerstone of the next Labour manifesto. If this happens, Labour will deserve huge credit for enriching our democracy.

“Labour has the opportunity to embrace its future as the largest party in a coalition government rather than condemning the country to another five years of disastrous Tory rule.”

ENDS

Notes

[1] <https://labourforelectoralreform.org.uk/will-this-finally-be-prs-conference/>

[2] <https://labourlist.org/2021/07/exclusive-83-of-members-say-labour-should-back-proportional-representation/>

Back to main news page

Adblock test \(Why?\)

Green Party calls on George Eustice to organise an Emergency Food Resilience Summit

24 September 2021

- Urgent need to address supply chain issues, rebuild local food economies, and move towards more plant-based food for a climate emergency

After weeks of bare shelves in many shops due to the impacts of Brexit and Covid-19 there are now further threats to food supplies from an emerging energy crisis. The Green Party says urgent action is needed to build resilience into the UK's food supply systems.

Jonathan Elmer, Green Party spokesperson for the Natural World, said:

“The complex and multifaceted food crisis means there is a risk many will go hungry this autumn. That is why the Green Party is calling for an Emergency Food Resilience Summit to address questions of food supply and food poverty.

"Covid, Brexit and now the rise in gas prices have shown the lack of resilience in our food system. Importing nearly half of our food [1] and depending on lengthy supply chains leaves us highly vulnerable.

"A resilient food system would bring producers and consumers closer together. Farmers markets and local food coops, including community-supported agriculture, can make high-quality affordable food available locally, while also ensuring that more of the value of production stays with the farmer.

"We also need a public debate over how to change our eating habits in ways that help rather than worsen the climate crisis. Greens have long called for less meat eating and more plant-based food, alongside re-localised food supply chains, to reduce the climate impact of what we eat."

The Green party also want a Food Resilience Summit to address the problems farmers and food producers are facing as a result of the UK leaving the single market and customs union.

Former Green MEP, Molly Scott Cato, who used to sit on the European Parliament's Agriculture Committee, said:

"Greens want the government to urgently conclude a veterinary deal with the EU and move towards rejoining the customs union. This would help British farmers rebuild the huge export losses they have sustained as a result of Brexit [2]."

Notes:

[1]

<https://www.gov.uk/government/statistics/food-statistics-pocketbook/food-statistics-in-your-pocket-global-and-uk-supply>

[2] Brexit: food and drink exports to EU suffer 'disastrous' decline:

<https://www.theguardian.com/business/2021/sep/02/brexit-uk-food-drink-exports-eu-disastrous-decline>

Back to main news page

Adblock test \(Why?\)

New World Health Organisation air pollution limits a wake-up call for government to tackle UK's dirty air

Stand with us

Adblock test \(Why?\)