Foreign Secretary statement on Guyana, March 2020

The United Kingdom expresses deep concern about the events following the elections in Guyana on 2 March 2020.

We call upon the President to preserve the principle of free, fair and credible elections. Allegations of electoral fraud and premature declarations of victory prior to the completion of a credible process pose a grave threat to the democratic principles of Guyana.

We call upon President Granger to ensure that proper procedures are followed before embarking upon a transition of government.

We stand ready to offer assistance to ensure a credible election result is produced.

Gender Equality: challenges and opportunities

The event follows on from the Embassy's Business and Human Rights agenda, and the guest-speakers were all female leaders in senior decision-making positions in key businesses in Guatemala and members of Britcham.

Participants included Ruby Asturias, partner at EY, Natalia Callejas, partner at Aguilar Castillo Love and Lucia Valenzuela, founder of Advocacy for Business and Human Rights. The dialogue was moderated by Marielos Chang, Chevening Alumni.

The panel discussion was an opportunity for them to share their own experiences on how to break the work-family narrative that fits with broader cultural norms. The group discussed the impact of the current political and legal systems on a woman's life, and which improvements could be made by Guatemala to positively influence the situation for women around the country.

In addition, the importance for businesses to include a gender perspective in their operations, that for example, improve representation of women in senior decision-making positions, as well as policies that tackle harassment and how to effectively approach the gender pay-gap.

To highlight the Embassy's commitment to focussing on women and girls around the country, the event featured a video of a project in Sololá on girls' education, which addresses child pregnancies and the rights to a choice over their bodies and their future.

Gender Equality in children

Nick Whittingham, British Ambassador to Guatemala said:

Gender equality is a topic we must address; it's the right thing to do and it is everyone's responsibility to ensure that women and girls have the same opportunities and resources available to them as men and boys.

New chapter in UK-Algeria relations

In the build up to the COP26 conference on climate change in Glasgow, the UK and Algeria have agreed a new working partnership to tackle climate change.

The first UK-Algeria Strategic Dialogue, held in Algiers on 9 March, also focused on education, and led to an agreement for the first British school to open in Algeria and for the promotion of the English language. Both sides also agreed to establish a trade and investment taskforce to allow businesses to continue trading freely after the end of the UK's transition period with the EU.

The UK's Minister of State for the Middle East and North Africa, James Cleverly MP, led the UK delegation and was hosted in Algiers by Algerian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr Rachid Bladehane. Discussions also reinforced each side's commitment to cooperation across a range of areas, including political, economic, security and cultural relations.

UK's Minister of State for the Middle East and North Africa, James Cleverly, said:

Algeria is a key partner in the region for the UK. These talks made clear the extent of the expanding friendship and co-operation between the UK and Algeria.

I welcome the new Algerian government's commitment to political and economic reform. Our shared future is bright, and I look forward to growing the UK's win-win partnership with Algeria on the issues that matter to us both.
