

Great shame UK has been shunned from European Capital of Culture 2023 – Watson

Tom Watson MP, Labour's Shadow Secretary of State for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport, commenting on the EU commission's decision to revoke Britain's hosting of European Capital of Culture 2023, said:

"The news that the UK has been shunned from this European cultural competition is a great shame for the whole country and particularly for the cities that had put in bids to be the European Capital of Culture in 2023.

"Some cities have already spent up to £500,000 on their bid submissions.

"Being the Capital of Culture had a transformative effect in Glasgow and Liverpool, fuelling regeneration, tourism and community pride. That opportunity has now been taken away from the bidding cities.

"The Government must now explain how they intend to ensure that Brexit does not leave us culturally isolated from Europe and how the economic and cultural benefits that accompany the European capital of culture will be maintained."

The Budget offers no plan to fix the housing crisis – John Healey

John Healey MP, Labour's Shadow Housing Secretary, responding to the Chancellor's announcements on housing in the Budget, said:

"This is a 'nothing has changed' Budget from a Government with no idea of the reality of people's lives and no plan to improve them. This was billed as the 'housing budget', but the announcements fall far short of a proper plan to help fix the housing crisis. There's zero chance that these small-scale Budget changes will enable the country to build 300,000 new homes a year.

"There is no extra Government investment in new affordable homes, no action to help private renters with soaring costs, and just three small-scale pilots to help the homeless.

"Cutting

stamp duty, without the significant increase in house-building that Labour promised, will only drive up prices, rather than help the millions of young people who want to buy a home of their own.

“After seven years of failure on housing, which has seen homelessness double, home-ownership fall to a 30-year low and the lowest number of new social rented homes since records began, the country needed much better than this Budget offered.”

John McDonnell response to the Budget

John

McDonnell MP, Labour's Shadow Chancellor, responding to the Budget, said:

“This is a ‘nothing has changed’ Budget from an out-of-touch Government with no idea of the reality of people’s lives and no plan to improve them.

“Philip Hammond has completely failed to recognise the scale of the emergency in our public services.

“Today’s Budget has found no meaningful funding for our schools still facing their first real terms funding cuts since the mid-90s and nothing even approaching the scale needed to address the crisis in our NHS or local government.

“For all the fanfare on housing, today saw more tinkering in place of decisive action, with only one third of funding announced today genuinely new. The Chancellor announced no measures to directly increase house-building and, without that, lifting stamp duty for some will only drive up prices and benefit sellers, as the OBR have acknowledged.

“The Government’s rollout of Universal Credit is causing real suffering in our communities. Today rather than the halt the botched rollout and fix the failing system, the Chancellor has put back £1 for every £10 cut from the system. Today all the Chancellor could offer those struggling with debt and rent arrears is further debt.

“Economic growth is the lowest it has been since the Tories came into office and today’s Budget confirms that failure, with growth and wage forecasts revised down in every year of the forecast. If the Government cannot address the scale of the challenges facing our economy they should stand aside for a Labour government that will.”

Jeremy Corbyn Budget 2017 response

Jeremy Corbyn MP, Leader of the Labour Party, responding to the Chancellor’s Budget, said:

CHECK AGAINST DELIVERY**

Mr
Deputy Speaker, this Budget has been an advertisement for just how out-of-touch this Government is with the reality of people’s lives.

Pay
is now lower for most people than it was in 2010 and wages are now falling again.

Economic growth in the first three quarters of this year is the lowest since 2009 and the slowest of the major economies in the G7.

It’s
a record of failure with a forecast of more. Economic growth has been revised down. Productivity growth has been revised down. Business investment revised down.

People’s wages and living standards revised down. What sort of “strong economy, fit for the future” is that?

The
deficit was due to be eradicated by 2015, then 2016, then 2017, then 2020 and now 2025. They’re missing their major targets but the failed and damaging policy of austerity remains.

The number of people sleeping rough has doubled since 2010 and 120,000 children will spend this Christmas in temporary accommodation. In some parts of the country life expectancy is actually starting to fall.

The last Labour government lifted a million children out of poverty. Under this Government an extra 1 million children will be plunged into poverty by the end of this Parliament. 1.9 million pensioners and one in six are living in poverty – the worst rate in Western Europe.

Falling pay, slow growth, and rising poverty. This is what the Chancellor has the barefaced cheek to call a “strong economy”.

His predecessor said they would put the burden on “those with the broadest shoulders”. How has that turned out?

The poorest tenth of households will lose about 10 per cent of their income by 2022 while the richest will lose just 1 per cent.

So much for “tackling burning injustices”. This Government is tossing fuel on the fire.

Personal debt levels are rising and 8.3 million people are over-indebted. If he wants to help people out of debt, he should back Labour’s policy for a Real Living Wage of £10 per hour by 2020.

And with working class young people now leaving university with £57,000 of debt – because this Government trebled tuition fees – this Government’s new policy to win over young people is to keep fees at £9,250.

But that is just one of a multitude of injustices presided over by this Government. Another is Universal Credit, which Labour has called on ministers to pause and fix.

That’s the view of this House. It’s the verdict of those on the frontline with evidence showing food bank use increases 30 per cent where Universal Credit is rolled out.

And
the benches opposite should listen to Martin's experience, a full-time worker on the minimum wage, he says: "I get paid four weekly meaning that my pay date is different each month", because of that, under the UC system he was paid twice in a month and deemed to have earned too much so his UC was cut off. He goes on: "This led me into rent arrears and I had to use a food bank for the first time in my life".

This
Chancellor's solution to a failing system causing more debt; is to offer a loan. And the six week wait, with 20 per cent waiting even longer, becomes a five week wait.

This system has been run down by £3 billion cuts to Work Allowances, the two-child limit and the perverse 'rape clause' – and caused evictions because housing benefit isn't paid direct to the landlord.

So
I say to the Chancellor: put this broken system on hold, so it can be fixed, and keep a million more children out of poverty.

For years we have had the rhetoric of a "long-term economic plan" that never meets its targets; when what all too many are experiencing is long-term economic pain.

And
the hardest hit are disabled people, single parents and women.

So
it is disappointing the Chancellor did not back the campaign of my Hon Friend for Brent Central, Dawn Butler, to end period poverty.

The
Conservative manifesto has now been shredded and some ministers opposite have since put forward decent proposals, several conspicuously borrowed from the Labour manifesto.

Let me tell the Chancellor, as socialists we are happy to share.

The
Communities Secretary called for £50 billion of borrowing to invest in housebuilding. Presumably the Prime Minister slapped him down for wanting to "bankrupt Britain".

The

Health Secretary has said the pay cap is over but where is the money to fund a pay rise? The Chancellor hasn't been clear today, not for NHS workers nor for our police, firefighters, teachers or teaching assistants, bin collectors, tax collectors or our armed forces personnel.

Will the Chancellor listen to Claire? She says, "My Mum works for the NHS. She goes above and beyond for her patients. Why does the Government think it's ok to under pay, over stress and underappreciate all that work?"

The NHS Chief Executive says "the budget for the NHS next year is well short of what is currently needed".

The Health Secretary said in 2015 he would fund another 5,000 GPs, but in the last year we have 1,200 fewer GPs. We've lost community nurses. We've lost mental health nurses.

The Chancellor promised £10 billion in 2015 but delivered only £4.5 billion so we'll wait for the small print on today's announcement. It certainly falls well short of the £6 billion Labour would have delivered.

Over a million of our elderly aren't receiving the care they need. Over £6 billion will have been cut from social care budgets by March next year.

Our schools will be 5 per cent worse off by 2019 despite the Conservative manifesto promising that no school would be worse off.

5,000 head teachers from 25 counties wrote to the Chancellor, saying "we are simply asking for the money that is being taken out of the system to be returned".

Robert wrote to me saying, "As a senior science technician my pay has been reduced by over 30 per cent. I've seen massive cuts at my school. Good teachers and support staff leave".

According to this Government, 5,000 head teachers are wrong. Robert is wrong. The IFS is wrong.

Councils

are warning that services for vulnerable children are under more demand than ever, yet have a £2 billion shortfall. Local councils will have lost nearly 80 per cent in direct funding by 2020.

In

reality, across the country this means women's refuges closing, youth centres closing, libraries closing, museums closing.

But

compassion can cost very little and just £10 million is needed to establish the child funeral fund campaigned for by my hon friend for Swansea East, Carolyn Harris.

Under

this Government there are 20,000 fewer police officers. And another 6,000 community support officers, and 11,000 Fire Service staff have been cut too.

Our

communities cannot be kept safe on the cheap.

Tammy

explains how this has affected her: "our police presence has been taken away meaning increasing crime. As a single parent I no longer feel safe in my own village, particularly after dark."

Mr

Deputy Speaker, five and a half million workers earn less than the living wage, a million more than just five years ago.

And

the Chancellor can't even see 1.4 million unemployed people.

There is a crisis of low pay and insecure work, affecting 1 in 4 women, and 1 in 6 men, a record 7.4 million people in working households in poverty.

If

we want workers earning better pay, less dependent on in-work benefits, we need to strengthen trade unions. the most effective means to boost workers' pay.

Instead

this Government weakened trade unions and introduced Employment Tribunal fees – now scrapped thanks to Unison's legal victory.

And

Mr Deputy Speaker, why didn't the Chancellor take the opportunity to make two changes to control debt?

Firstly,
to cap credit card debt so that nobody pays back more than they borrowed.

And
secondly, to stop credit card companies increasing people's credit limit without their say so.

Debt
is being racked up because this Government is weak on those who exploit people:
the rail companies hiking fares above inflation year-on-year, the water companies and the energy suppliers.

During
the general election it promised an energy cap that would benefit "around 17 million families on standard variable tariffs". But every bill tells millions of families the Government has broken its promise.

And
with £10 billion in housing benefit going into the pockets of private landlords every year, housing is a key factor in driving up the welfare bill.

With this Government delivering the worst rate of housebuilding since the 1920s
and a quarter of a million fewer council homes, any commitment is welcome.

But
we've been here before. The Government promised 200,000 starter homes three years ago and not a single one has been built.

We need a large scale public house building programme, not this Government's accounting tricks and empty promises.

We
back the abolition of stamp duty for first-time buyers because it was another Labour policy at the election, not a Tory one.

It's
this Government's continual preference for spin over substance that means, across this country, the words "Northern Powerhouse" and "Midlands Engine" are now met with derision.

Yorkshire
and Humber gets only one-tenth of the transport investment per head given to London.

And

Government figures show that every region in the north of England has seen a fall in spending on services since 2012.

The Midlands, East and West, is receiving less than 8 per cent of total transport infrastructure investment, compared with over 50 per cent going to London.

In the East and West Midlands 1 in 4 workers are paid less than the living wage. So much for the 'Midlands Engine'.

Re-announced funding for the Transpennine rail route won't cut it and today's other announcements won't redress the balance.

Combined with counterproductive austerity, this lack of investment has consequences in sluggish growth and shrinking pay packets, and public investment has virtually halved.

Under this Government, the UK has the lowest rate of public investment in the G7, but it is now investing in driverless cars after months of road-testing back seat driving in government.

By moving from RPI to CPI indexation on business rates the Chancellor has adopted another Labour policy, but why don't they go further and adopt Labour's entire business rates pledges including exempting plant and machinery and annual revaluation of business rates.

Nowhere has that been more evident than over Brexit.

Following round after round of fruitless Brexit negotiations the Brexit Secretary has been shunted out for the Prime Minister who has got no further.

Every major business organisation has written to the Government telling them to pull their finger out.

Businesses are delaying investment decisions, but if this Government doesn't get its act together soon they will be taking relocation decisions.

Crashing

out with 'No deal' and turning Britain into a tin-pot tax haven will damage people's jobs and living standards, serving only a wealthy few.

It's

not as if this Government isn't doing its best to protect tax havens and their clients in the meantime.

The

Paradise papers have again exposed how a super-rich elite is allowed to get away with dodging taxes.

This

Government has opposed measure after measure in this House, and in the European Parliament, to clamp down on the tax havens that facilitate this outrageous leaching from the public purse.

Mr

Deputy Speaker, too often it feels like there is one rule for the super-rich and another for the rest of us.

The

horrors of Grenfell Tower were a reflection of a system that puts profits before people, that fails to listen to working class people.

In

2013 this Government received advice in a coroner's report that sprinklers should be fitted in all high rise buildings.

Today

this government failed to fund the £1 billion investment needed to make homes safe. The Chancellor says councils should contact them, but Nottingham has, Westminster has, and they've been refused!

In

a Parliament building scheduled to be retrofitted with sprinklers, to protect us, the message from this government to people living in high rise homes is: You matter less.

Our

country is marked by growing inequality and injustice.

We

were promised a revolutionary Budget. The reality is nothing has changed.

People were looking for help from this Budget, they have been let down.

Let

down by a Government that like the economy they've presided over is weak and unstable and in need of urgent change.

They call this Budget, 'Fit for the Future'. The reality is this is a Government no longer fit for office.

Tomorrow's Budget needs to see a real change of direction – McDonnell

John McDonnell MP, Labour's Shadow Chancellor, speaking ahead of the Budget tomorrow, said:

"The Chancellor has already shown he doesn't live in the real world. That's why the Autumn Budget needs to be a real change of direction in economic policy.

"Instead of gimmicks such as driverless cars, or tricks to fiddle the figures just so Philip Hammond can pretend he is reaching his own targets, there must be a recognition of the emergency in our public services and an actual end to austerity.

"The Chancellor must also pause the roll out of Universal Credit, and have a complete reform. It won't be good enough just to reduce the number of weeks people are waiting, because we will still have families who won't be paid by Christmas and forced into poverty. We have already seen families faced with eviction due to this delay, so we need urgent action.

"Furthermore, this Budget cannot be one of empty promises and piecemeal measures. He must launch a full scale house-building programme and provide serious infrastructure funding across the whole country, as even his fellow Tory MPs have called for.

"The public sector pay cap must come to an end. We are the sixth richest country in the world and we cannot afford to have our dedicated public sector workers such as nurses, reliant on food-banks. The fact is that wages are not keeping up with prices, and many working families are struggling to make ends meet.

"If Philip Hammond can fund tax giveaways worth billions for the super-rich and big business, then he can properly fund our public services and public sector workers. Austerity is a political choice, not an economic necessity.

"If the Tories refuse to act, then they should step aside. The next Labour Government will provide the proper investment our country needs to build the high-wage, high-skilled economy of the future."
