

PAC reports Eurotunnel legal settlement cost nearly £100m – Andy McDonald

Andy McDonald MP, Labour's Shadow Transport Secretary, commenting on the Public Accounts Committee's report which found that the government's legal settlement with Eurotunnel has cost taxpayers nearly £100 million, said:

"This report exposes the government's shambolic no-deal Brexit preparations. The Transport Secretary's incompetence has already cost taxpayers tens of millions of pounds.

"It is beyond belief that he should be given another opportunity to squander public cash and throw our transport networks into chaos. This country cannot afford Chris Grayling."

CCC criticizes ramshackle climate change prep – Rebecca Long Bailey responds

Rebecca Long Bailey MP, Labour's Shadow Business and Energy Secretary, responding to the CCC report on climate change saying that efforts to cut greenhouse gas emissions are lagging far behind what is needed, said:

"This is a remarkable, damning assessment of the Government's failure to tackle and prepare for climate change by their own advisors.

"With the Government delivering on just one out of 25 policy areas, this is proof, if more were needed, that the Government has no plan to tackle the climate emergency declared by Parliament.

“Labour takes the climate crisis seriously, and will kickstart a Green Industrial Revolution to safeguard our future and transform our economy.”

Ethnicity pay gap – Dawn Butler responds

Dawn Butler MP, Labour’s Shadow Women and Equalities Secretary, commenting on the ONS ethnicity pay gap figures for 2018 released today, said:

“Today’s figures highlight the shocking persistence of ethnic pay inequality. People need to earn a fair wage based on merit, not by virtue of the colour of their skin – it’s shocking to see the largest ethnicity pay gap exists in London at 21.7% – one of the most diverse capital cities in the world.

“While the government seeks consultation on the ethnicity pay gaps from employers, it’s yet to give us tangible solutions to address the issue. We need action not audits.

“Labour in government will make it a priority to close all pay gaps, gender and ethnicity included, to help address the barriers people across our society face, so we can truly create a country that works for the many, not the few.”

consultation by challenging the next prime minister to put their deal to the people in a referendum, in which Labour would campaign for remain against No Deal or a damaging Tory Brexit

This morning, Jeremy Corbyn, Leader of the Labour Party, convened a meeting of the party's shadow cabinet to agree a settled Brexit position. The Labour Party will now challenge whoever emerges as the leader of the Conservative Party to have the confidence to put their deal to the people in a referendum, with remain on the ballot, in which Labour would campaign for remain.

Today's announcement, follows weeks of consultations across the party and wider labour movement, as Jeremy Corbyn has sought to bring the whole movement together around a common position.

Jeremy Corbyn has written to every Labour member to lay out the party's policy.

Jeremy Corbyn's email to all members:

Dear member,

I am proud to lead the Labour Party – the greatest political party and social movement in this country.

We all recognise that the issue of Brexit has been divisive in our communities and sometimes in our party too.

As democrats, Labour accepted the result of the 2016 referendum. In our 2017 manifesto, Labour also committed to oppose a No Deal Brexit and the Tories' Brexit plans – which threatened jobs, living standards, and the open multicultural society that we as internationalists value so much.

I want to pay tribute to Keir Starmer and the shadow Brexit team for holding the Government to account during this process. That helped secure a meaningful vote on their deal – which we then defeated three times – including inflicting the largest ever defeat on any Government. And following their refusal to publish their legal advice, this Government became the first to be held in contempt of Parliament.

Labour set out a compromise plan to try to bring the country together based around a customs union, a strong single market relationship and protection of environmental regulations and rights at work. We continue to believe this is a sensible alternative that could bring the country together.

But the Prime Minister refused to compromise and was unable to deliver, so we ended cross-party talks.

Now both Tory leadership candidates are threatening a No Deal Brexit – or at best a race to the bottom and a sweetheart deal with Donald Trump: that runs down industry, opens up our NHS and other public services to yet more privatisation, and shreds environmental protections, rights at work and consumer standards.

I have spent the past few weeks consulting with the shadow cabinet, MPs, affiliated unions and the NEC. I have also had feedback from members via the National Policy Forum consultation on Brexit.

Whoever becomes the new Prime Minister should have the confidence to put their deal, or No Deal, back to the people in a public vote.

In those circumstances, I want to make it clear that Labour would campaign for Remain against either No Deal or a Tory deal that does not protect the economy and jobs.

Labour has a crucial, historic duty to safeguard jobs, rights and living standards. But no Brexit outcome alone can do that.

We need a general election. After nine years of austerity, too many people in this country cannot find decent secure well-paid work, and have to rely on public services that have been severely cut back.

Our country is ravaged by inequality and rising poverty, huge regional imbalances of investment, and the government is failing to tackle the climate emergency facing us all.

That is why we need a Labour government to end austerity and rebuild our country for the many not the few.

Yours

Jeremy Corbyn

Tories have cut police funding and personnel consistently since 2010 – Diane Abbott

Diane Abbott MP, Shadow Home Secretary, responding to the release of a new Home Office document on police funding from 2015, said:

“The Home Secretary may be kidding himself with assertions of rising police funding, but he won’t fool over-stretched police forces or the general public who are increasingly concerned about rising violent crime.

“The Tories have cut police funding and personnel consistently since 2010. If they don't face up to this fact, Labour in government will. We will recruit thousands of new officers to tackle rising crime."
