Following the 2019 General Election, the Federal Board commissioned Dorothy Thornhill and her team of fourteen to conduct an independent review of the Party's performance.

The Liberal Democrats are committed to a fair and open society and reflect that in our internal approach to transparency and accountability. The resulting report is therefore available here in its entirety.

How do we improve as a party and achieve greater success in future elections?

That's the theme running through the bumper set of key decisions the Federal Board is looking at next week at our meeting. (Or rather meetings, as to avoid Zoom fatigue, we're splitting one long meeting into halves on consecutive nights.)

Making sure the COVID-19 tracing app is safe and effective

Reports suggest that the NHS tracing app is set to be rolled out nationwide by end of next week, despite concerns about privacy and misuse of personal data.

That's why we're calling on the government to bring forward a new "Safe Trace App Law", to ensure the Government's coronavirus tracing app is safe and effective.

This new primary legislation would force the Government to justify its decision to reject plans for a decentralised app (as recommended by the Information Commissioner) and pursue a centralised app instead, despite experts warning that:

- It may not work on phones that are locked or when it's running in the background.
- It will drain a phone's battery, so won't work for long.
- It will be incompatible with other countries' apps, including Ireland's.
- It puts people's privacy at greater risk.

The Safe Trace App Law would provide a clear legal framework for this enormous collection, storage and use of people's personal data, including:

- A guarantee that your data will be deleted within 21 days of being collected, on a rolling basis.
- Creating legal safeguards against discrimination so no one can be excluded from any space for not having or refusing to use the app.
- Introducing significant penalties for the misuse of personal data.

The coronavirus tracing app set to be rolled out by the end of next week, despite privacy concerns.

Daisy Cooper, our Spokesperson for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport, said:

"Any strategy for easing the country out of lockdown must prevent another surge. An app alone will not end this lockdown, but a safe and effective app could play an important part in a broader strategy to test, trace and isolate to keep people safe.

It is vital that the Government gets this right first time. It must not lose valuable time and risk losing public confidence by reinventing the wheel when there are already effective models it could use.

That's why the Liberal Democrats are calling on the Government to bring forward a new Safe Trace App Law, to ensure that the app will keep people safe, and be a genuinely effective tool in which the public have confidence.

To keep people safe, the Government must be open and honest about the decisions it is making in the design of this app. If the public don't have confidence in it, they won't use it – our plans for a Safe Trace App Law would fix that."

The Government has extend furlough scheme – now they must support self-employed

The Furlough scheme has helped protect jobs and it is something the Liberal Democrats have campaigned to protect.

So we are delighted the Government has done just that and adopted many of our ideas.

However there are still millions of people that need significant help through this challenging period.

Some who moved jobs but were not on their new employer's payroll by mid-March have fallen into a crack in the system and need much more help.

That's why the Chancellor must help those excluded from job retention scheme & those self-employed not covered by any scheme.

Responding to the news Acting Leader of the Liberal Democrats Ed Davey said:

“The lockdown has also been extremely difficult for many self employed people. Taxi drivers, hairdressers, cleaners, childcare providers and millions of other self-employed people are still not getting the help they need.

“The Liberal Democrats led the campaign for a Self-Employment Income Support Scheme, which will finally open tomorrow. But the Government must extend this scheme too.

Self-employed people have waited far too long for this support, and they must not see it snatched away too early.”

“Liberal Democrats have fought hard for the #FurloughScheme to be extended, and today we are pleased to see that the government has done just that.

Now the Chancellor must extend protections for self employed people who are most vulnerable during this crisis.” – @EdwardJDavey

My first year as a councillor in Eastbourne

I can't believe it was a year ago I was elected as an Eastbourne Borough Councillor, the time has absolutely flown by. What a year it's been, and who could have imagined a year ago that I would be writing this during lockdown in the middle of a pandemic, a crisis affecting local councils across the country?
