

5 reasons why we love our NHS

1. Saving lives

The NHS provides some of the best emergency care in the world. Although the NHS winter crisis has placed unprecedented pressure on our health service, the NHS has, historically, maintained an impressive standard of emergency care. Last year an astounding 23.65 million of us attended A&E. This number increases each year. Over the last five years A&E departments have seen a 7.2% rise in attendance. Yet despite this enormous pressure, A&E staff display tireless dedication during gruelling 12-hour shifts and regularly go above-and-beyond the call of duty.

The NHS provides some of the best emergency care in the world.

Go to Source

Author:

Tom Brake responds to Boris' speech

If this speech was supposed to offer an olive branch to Remainers, Boris must have picked up the other version.

Go to Source

Author:

Nothing short of a full enquiry into the aid sector will do

Helen Evans, former head of safeguarding at Oxfam, made damning accusations about the lack of basic processes and disregard of serious concerns she raised, the substance of which were not denied by the Chief Executive.

Go to Source

Author:

How to keep up to date with the Liberal Democrats online

It's never been easier to get all the latest news from the Liberal Democrats online – and there's one quick and easy way to beat the algorithm and make sure you never miss a thing.

Watch the video to find out more, then, like the pages below.

Go to Source

Author:

The Government have no plan and no idea

Michel Barnier has warned that a transition period immediately after Brexit is 'not a given' and that he did not understand some of the UK's positions on Brexit.

Go to Source

Author: