

Computer errors led to 450,000 missed screenings in England since 2009

Up to 270 women in England may have died because they did not receive invitations to a final routine breast cancer screening, the Health Secretary, Jeremy Hunt, announced on Wednesday.

Speaking in the Commons, the Health Secretary said 450,000 women aged around 70 had failed to get invitations since 2009. It is not known whether any delay in diagnosis resulted in avoidable death, but it is estimated that between 135 and 270 women had their lives shortened as a result, he said.

Go to Source

Author:

UKIP Leader Gerard Batten on Peston and Daily Politics

Go to Source

Author:

Juncker's decision to commemorate Marx speaks volumes

The decision of the European Commission President to unveil a statue to and speak at the celebrations of Karl Marx's 200th anniversary celebrations in Trier is a travesty say UKIP.

Go to Source

Author:

Alfie Evans “must be released to his parents for flight to Italian hospital”, says Alan Craig

UKIP rooting for Tom Evans and Kate James in their courageous fight against “cruel ass” legal and medical authorities.

As Tom Evans and Kate James return to court again this afternoon, UKIP has condemned the legal and medical authorities who have, so far, frustrated their attempt to have baby Alfie flown by medical ambulance to an Italian hospital.

Go to Source

Author:

Batten Slams Labour Leader in the European Parliament Over Issue of a Second EU Referendum

UKIP Leader, Gerard Batten, has slammed Labour’s Leader in the European Parliament, Richard Corbett, after he raised the possibility of a second EU referendum, saying; “while another vote may be the great hope of the pro-European political elite; it will do nothing more than further polarise public opinion on the matter of Brexit.”

Go to Source

Author: